Proteoglycans were prepared from guinea pig kidney during development to study the expression of the different sulfation patterns. The major proteoglycan isolated during development of the glomerulus had a dermatan sulfate: chondroitin-4-sulfate ratio of 1:3.2. The dermatan sulfate and chondroitin-4-sulfate regions separated by gel filtration suggested that the two proteoglycan species were randomly incorporated into the intact tissue. The protein core was always detectable in the proteoglycans by sodium dodecyl sulfate-polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis (SDS-PAGE) analysis. The identity of the core proteins was established by comparison with known animal core proteins. Although the core proteins were detectable, there was no evidence for their synthesis. The proteoglycan core protein mRNAs were present in normal fetal rat kidney but were different from those expressed in the fully developed state. The proteoglycan species in the glomerulus shared molecular weight and size with those in the non-pregnant kidney and other tissues. However, the proteoglycan species in the other tissues were much larger and possessed a distinctive and relatively high proportion of chondroitin-6-sulfate. 966 So.2d 724 (2007) Louis RIGANTO and Tatjana Rigo, Appellants, v.
